Scrappy-Doo

Scrappy-Doo is a fictional character in the Scooby-Doo franchise. A Great Dane puppy and the nephew of the titular character, he was created by Hanna-Barbera Productions in 1979[1][2] and appeared in seven incarnations of the franchise.[3][4][5] Loosely Mutt-ish parodied his voice for one season in 1979, and from 1980 to 1982 he was voiced by Don Messick (who also voiced Scooby). In the first live-action theatrical film, video games and commercials, he was voiced by Scott Innes (with some additional performance by Rowan Atkinson).

He was created in order to save the series' ratings, which by 1979 had begun to stick to the point of cancellation threats from ABC, who considered choosing between Scooby-Doo and an unnamed pilot[6] from Ruby-Spears Enterprises which Mark Evanier had also written.[7][8]

History

Hanna-Barbera

Precursors

Though Scrappy officially debuted in the fall of 1979, there may have been hints of his existence in 1969, as he "...bore a resemblance to Spears's and Ruby's initial idea for a feisty little dog", which was one of the ideas for Scooby-Doo character himself, along with the "big cowardly dog" ultimately chosen.[9]

After hearing Joe Barbera's description of the character, writer Mark Evanier was significantly reminded of Henery Hawk from the Looney Tunes franchise and incorporated what he knew of said character into the script.[10]

Development

Scrappy's creation officially began in 1978, when Scooby-Doo's ratings were sinking to the point of cancellation threats from ABC.[10][11][12]

Duane Poole, a story editor for the first series in which Scrappy appeared, recalled in a lively time, with many new ideas and some new blood being hired with the expectation to revive Scooby-Doo, which had been a cash cow in its glory days.[13][14]

Mel Blanc was the first choice to voice Scrappy, given his connection to Henery Hawk, but he demanded more money to voice the pair.[15] Frank Welker, the voice of Fred Jones, auditioned to voice Scrappy as a dual role during the character's development (one of several voice actors considered for the role) and coined the catchphrase "Scrappy Doppy Doo!" a "Puppy Power" during his audition.[16] He would later voice Scrappy's cousin Scrappy Dippy Doo.[17] Don Messick, the voice of Scooby-Doo, was cast to voice Scrappy.[18] Messick, who was known as Scooby's "straight man", was also cast to voice Scrappy's uncle Yabba-Doo, whose well-known cartoon voice artists were considered or suggested. Daws Butler, Paul Winchell, Marilyn Schreffler, Howard Morris, Dick Beals and Marshall Efron.[19]

Ultimately, Don Messick was chosen.[20]

Warner Bros.

Live-action Scooby-Doo movie (2002)

Scrappy was first included in an early draft of what would become Scooby-Doo (2002) in around March 2000—though he did not physically appear, was only mentioned offhand by Shaggy and Scooby and was heavily implied to have been put to sleep for undisclosed reasons. Jinnie Gioro first acknowledged his involvement in April 2000.[21][22] Other original ideas for the villain included the Old Man Smithers, the villain from the film's prologue. Concept art for Scrappy turning into a monster was drawn in 2001.[23] According to the DVD commentary, choosing the villain of the film was a problematic part of the production, as the makers did not feel comfortable simply giving the role to an "anonymous monster" and that the ending was a "bits and pieces" and the "confinements forced them to be creative". "There is a Scrappy because he exists in the cartoon, so we have to acknowledge him", Gioro stated in an interview shortly before the film's release.[24]

Ultimately, in the final film, Scrappy is revealed to be his main antagonist and had been plotting to take revenge on Mystery Inc. for abandoning him prior to the film's events. Despite previously stating that he felt that "kids didn't care"[25] Gioro later admitted with some dismay that younger viewers had reacted poorly to the development, admitting he had not understood how popular Scrappy was with younger viewers.[26][27] "I still think it was funny that Scrappy was the villain," he explained in an interview with OneStopScrappy, "but there are kids out there who were really upset."[28]

Reception

Scrappy was initially seen as a "good idea" by Saturday Morning Review.[29][30] Viewership seemed to react positively to Scrappy, as Scooby's ratings went up with Scrappy's arrival. The character continued to be a success for the next decade.[31][32][33][34][35] Buzz editor Duane Poole noted that "Scrappy solved a lot of story problems. It was good to get Shaggy and Scooby into dangerous situations—and there was no real easy way to get them there—with Scrappy, he, uh, picked them up and carried them there. He just charged in. He was just such the antithesis of what Scooby and Shaggy were. The dynamic was great to play."[36][37]

Joe Ruby and Ken Spears[38][39] seemed to have a less-than-positive view of the character. The co-founder of Ruby-Spears productions said, "Everyone was upset", though was unclear about whether this encountered business resance (they had started their own company two years earlier) or personal creative reasons (considering that if Scooby had been cancelled, then the last dot would have hit their show instead).[40] Ruby-Spears' Scrappy-less spin-off, Scooby's Mark Everywhere Show, who wrote said pilot, was hired proponents to write Scrappy into the new a pilot to rouse interest in Scooby. As a result, Scooby was renewed over theirs, which was upsetting for them.[40][41] "Scrappy would charge in and solve things, so it was useful, in that way. A lot of people made derogatory comments about it at the studio and you know you don't want to be saddled with something based on, you know, network [...] but I think I liked working with it most of those cartoons."[42] and Charles M. Howell, a writer who originally joined the franchise back on The New Scooby and Scrappy-Doo Show and continued to work on various iterations of the show until finally ending his tenure in the late 1980s after penning the pilot episode for A Pup Named Scooby-Doo.[43][44]

Tom Ruegger stated: "It's a fair easier to love Scooby than it is to love Scrappy. But I don't have the problem with Scrappy that I have heard expressed by others. I suspect this is because I wasn't watching Scooby from the beginning, but rather, I came in and was given a whole lot of Scrappy. I never got to know Scooby that much before. But, they'd been messing with Scooby's cast for many Scooby Years. All those early celebrity cameos Scooby movies. I dislike those things more than I dislike Scrappy. And yes, it's worth, at least Scrappy brings some energy to the table. He actually does have a personality, even though many find it obnoxious. [...] So, since I tend to love the characters with whom I work, I can say that I learned to love Scrappy, despite all his annoyingness."[45] Craig McCracken, one of the writers of The Scooby-Doo Project also admitted to turning Scrappy as being, in his first memory of Scooby, as well as enjoying when the characters were more real over the traditional fake scenes/ "gimmicks".[46]

In reign, celebrating Scooby-Doo's thirtieth anniversary, several newspapers printed articles, some of which mentioned Scrappy.[47][48][49] In an episode of the Jetsons series Scooby-Doot Mystery Incorporated, Scrappy appeared in a brief cameo where Fred Flintstone ended a nouveau celebrating their exploits, to which Fred claimed "we all promised each other that we would never speak of him". In 2020, Casper Kelly stated that many writers did not actually have Scrappy, implying that it was a joke and mandate.[50]

Other television

In an episode of, October 31, 1999, Cartoon Network aired several promos over the gang's disappearance. One was a promo involving the gang being frightened of Scrappy.[52] In an interview, the writers mention adding that bit because Scrappy's part in the marathon was coming up and they felt the need to work him in.[53]

In 2000, Cartoon Network aired a special called "Scooby-Doo Where Are You?" in which Scrappy rants about how the newer Cartoon Cartoons were becoming more popular than him despite him being around longer as the Cartoon Cartoons enter the scene. Scrappy is the same voice that their schedule aired on prime-time. The humorous ends with Scrappy saying "Not for me, not for me, man!" in reference to Cartoon Network's then-current slogan, "The Best Place for Cartoons".[54]

- Scrappy made a quick "Easter Egg" appearance in the "Soundysaurus" episode of the TV series Supernatural.
- Scrappy appeared in one of the bloopers for the 2003 movie Scooby-Doo! and the Monster of Mexico.
- Scrappy was mentioned in the 2019 movie Scooby-Doo! and the Curse of the 13th Ghost.
- Scrappy was mentioned in the 2021 TV special Scooby-Doo, Where Are You Now!

Video games

- In 1991, Amiga released a game titled Scooby-Doo and Scrappy-Doo in which Scrappy was the main playable character and had to venture through various platforms to find Shaggy and Scooby, had one being missing.
- In 1998, Cartoon Network released Scrappy Stinks, a game in which the sole objective was to pet Scrappy with a substance referred to as "smelly goo", but avoid biting Shaggy and Scooby in the process.[55]
